

Wednesday, September 17, 2008 - 3:01 PM CDT

AllergiCare Relief

AllergiCare Relief Centers is opening a new clinic in San Antonio to help local allergy sufferers. The company now has 12 clinics nationwide.

AllergiCare launched the new office in the Alamo City because San Antonio has a large population of allergy sufferers. The new center is located at 8507 McCullough.

The company utilizes a technique that involves computer technology and laser therapy to condition the body to act “appropriately” when encountering allergens.

AllergiCare officials claim their treatment can address a wide range of seasonal allergies, including hay fever, pollen, grasses and trees. The centers can also address environmental allergens such as pollutants, dust and dust mites, as well as food allergens such as fruit, dairy and nuts.

“An allergy is simply a negative response created by your body as a result of interaction with a certain substance” San Antonio clinic director Andrew Moore says. “This negative response triggers a reaction within your body. These reactions may include sneezing, runny nose, itching, watery eyes, headaches and difficulty breathing.”

He adds, “Once an allergy is identified, our system works to retrain your body to turn that negative response into a positive or non-response so that future exposure to that substance no longer triggers these irritating reactions.”

Web site: www.allergicare.com